<h2>Academic Year 2019/2020</h2>

This module introduces students to the concepts behind security as applied within Europe. It briefly reviews the development of Europe's security architecture before proceeding to analyse in some depth the goals, capacity and profile of the European Union as an international actor in the field of foreign, security and defence policy. The seminar-based module is structured around student-led presentations, lectures, moderated discussions and a role play exercise. Students are expected to be self-motivated, to be willing to use (or to develop) good communications skills, to be willing to engage within a cooperative, collegial and mutually-supportive learning environment and to be willing to prepare for seminars through extensive reading and research. Assessment will be made by a variety of means on a continuous asssessment basis.

What will I learn?

Learning Outcomes:
At its conclusion students will be expected to be able to explain the theoretical bases of international security policy in the post-Cold War context of European foreign, security and defense policy. They will also be expected to be able to contextualise and to explain the European Union's capacity as an international actor. They will also be expected to explain why the EU is deserving of attention in this area and its international role. Students should finally be able to prepare an empirically-based assement of the Union's success and/or failure as an international actor and an informed assessment of the critical global issues that it faces.
