<h1 class="pageTitle">HIS21120 Northern Ireland, 1920-2010: from partition to Paisley</h1>
<h2>Academic Year 2019/2020</h2>

This course will chart the history of Northern Ireland from its foundation through state building, war, civil rights, sectarian conflict, and the peace process. Relative to its size, Northern Ireland is arguably the most studied and analysed place on earth in the twentieth century. Partition is by no means a phenomenon unique to Ireland. Germany, India, Korea, and Sudan are among the most prominent examples of a phenomenon that has been a major component of the twentieth century world.

The Northern Irish troubles witnessed the deaths of 3,636 people between 1966 and 1999. The conflict has been a defining moment in the modern histories of Northern Ireland, the Republic of Ireland, and Britain. In being a resolved conflict, the solution arrived at in 1998 has become a template for peace processes the world over.

1998 initiated a peace process rather than concluding a peace settlement. That peace has been at times unstable, fragile, and imperfect. This course will progress past the Good Friday Agreement, examining the history of near contemporary Northern Ireland to examine how power sharing, decommissioning, and cultural demobilisation have shaped a new polity, asking what changed and what stayed the same.

What will I learn?

Learning Outcomes:
On successful completion of this course, students will have developed an ability to assess critically the social, political, and military history of Northern Ireland since its foundation. Students will have examined the history of partition, the lived experience of the second world war on a home front, the campaigns against the continuance of the Northern Irish state between 1945 and 1962, civil rights and the progress of Troubles from their inception to their conclusion.

Through in-class document analysis, students will examine the primary sources of Northern Ireland s history.

For students wishing to further their understanding of conflict resolution, insurgency and counter-insurgency, sectarianism, and international/bi-lateral relations, this module will provide crucial new perspectives.

Reading List

Required materials

There are no set texts for this module; i.e. there are no works that you have to purchase in order that you consult them continuously throughout the whole semester. However, below are listed a number of works that would come in handy as reference works and introductions to the period and themes tackled.

The list that follows is by no means exhaustive; a great deal has been written about Nationalism and Northern Ireland increasingly so in recent years and for reasons of space a lot of material has been omitted. However, a good deal is listed below, so as to try and ensure that everyone has an increased chance of being able to access material that is relevant to each topic. Nevertheless, the library has other valuable materials, and you are encouraged to explore the relevant sections of the library for yourself. If, however, you want further suggestions for reading on any of the topics covered in this course, then please e-mail me at conor.mulvagh@ucd.ie, I will be happy to suggest other secondary texts.

A lot of material will be available on the Brightspace VLE but there are also three important internet sources that you can use for this course:

www.cain.ac.uk (Conflict Archive on the Internet): this website contains information and course material on the troubles and politics in Northern Ireland from 1968 to the present. There is also some material on society in the region. You will find a lot of the reading available here.

www.ark.ac.uk: a resource providing access to social and political material on Northern Ireland that informs social and political debate in the region and raises the profile of social science research

www.incore.ulst.ac.uk (INCORE (International Conflict Research Institute): is a joint project of the United Nations University and the University of Ulster. Combining research, education and comparative analysis, INCORE addresses the causes and consequences of conflict in Northern Ireland and internationally and promotes conflict resolution management strategies.

www.margareththatcher.org (Margaret Thatcher Foundation): massive online archive with thousands of text searchable documents relating to all aspects of Thatcher's political career. Includes House of Commons debate content, cabinet minutes, press briefing documents.

<http://www.bbc.co.uk/northernireland/learning/history/stateapart/> (BBC NI A State Apart): includes fact files, oral history interviews, a brief overview of the conflict, and very short introductions to the key political and paramilitary organizations involved.

<http://www.iwm.org.uk/> (Imperial War Museum): extensive photographic and text archive relating to the conflict in Northern Ireland from governmental, military, and personal perspectives

<http://hansard.millbanksystems.com/> (Hansard House of Commons and House of Lords debates online): 1803-2005 fully searchable records of all speech content in the British houses of parliament.

<http://historical-debates.oireachtas.ie/en.toc.dail.html> (Dáil/Seanad debates online): as above for all Oireachtas debates from 1919 to present.

<http://stormontpapers.ahds.ac.uk/stormontpapers/index.html> (Stormont Debates, 1920-72): as above for Stormont.

Remember, while these internet sources are valuable and provide excellent and reputable research, they should complement secondary sources, not replace them

Background reading: For those not familiar with Irish or British history, Marc Mulholland, Northern Ireland: a very short introduction (Oxford, 2003) is a recommended introduction.
